THE CHURCH

Founded in 1994...

The Church is open on Thursday and Sunday nights, although we host occasional special events other nights of the week.

Inspired by Carlos Menendez and his successful long running theme night, which began in Miami "Velvet" nightclub, The Church provides Dallas most unique nightclub experience. The Miami "Church" still exists, although in a different location.

The Church is located at 2424 Swiss Avenue, in the Swiss Avenue historic district. The original building was constructed in 1899 as a trolley car repair station, and is listed in the north Texas Haunted Building Registry. Paranormal researchers have confirmed that the building is, in fact, haunted, and we occasionally experience paranormal activity. The building underwent an extensive renovation in 1974 as the Grand Crystal Palace Dinner Theater. The Video Bar is actually a separate building, constructed in 1974, as an addition to the Crystal Palace.

The Church features 5 separate lounges, 3 DJs, and a rooftop patio with an incredible view of the city. The musical landscape can include everything from Ambient Sounds, Neo Gothic, current and classic Industrial, EBM, Electro, Dark House, and the occasional musical "surprise."

Past luminaries include Trent Reznor & Nine Inch Nails, Marilyn Manson, Peter Hook, Andy Laplegua, Combichrist, cEvin Key, Voltaire, Rubberdoll, Torture Garden, Korn, Disturbed, Depeche Mode, Lords of Acid, Dita Von Teese, Midori, Benny Benassi, Abney Park, Fischer Spooner & Front 242...to name a few.

The Church hosts unique theme parties, fashion shows and live music events, including Dallas Fetish Ball, Skin Party, Midnight Mass, Sanitarium, Gothic Beauty Pageant, Mad Hatters Ball, Black and Blue Ball, Zombie Prom and Geisha Lounge events.

The Church offers Dallas' most eclectic nightclub environment. We welcome you to visit and enjoy our unique brand of hospitality

Can Women Really Get Orgasms From Exercise?

Do you really have to do those much-touted kegel exercises? Not necessarily, new research claims. According to a recent study, the only fitness regimen you need to enhance your sexual pleasure may be your morning workout.

Though so-called "coregasms" -- female orgasms induced by core muscle exercises -- have been discussed anecdotally for years (even Alfred Kinsey mentioned them in his famous 1953 report), these findings from Indiana University offer scientific proof of their existence, says Medical Xpress. If you were looking for motivation to get yourself out of bed and into a gym in the morning, here it is. The study, led by Debby Herbenick, co-director of the Center for Sexual Health Promotion at IU, found that these "coregasms" were associated with a number of different exercises including abdominal workouts, biking and spinning, lifting weights and climbing poles or ropes. And this latest information about "coregasms" could do more than just encourage women to replace their vibrators with a spin class. "These data are interesting because they suggest that orgasm is not necessarily a sexual event," and they may also teach us more about how orgasms happen physiologically, Herbenick told Medical Xpress.

Herbenick and co-author J. Dennis Fortenberry, M.D., professor at the IU School of Medicine, surveyed 370 women, ranging in age from 18 to 63 for the study, all of who had already had some sort of exercise-induced sexual experience. 124 of the women had experienced exercise-induced orgasms (EIO) and 246 had experienced exercise-induced sexual pleasure (EISP) before the study began. Of the women who had EIOs, 51.4 percent had done so while engaging in abdominal exercises -- and usually after multiple sets of them, reported LiveScience -- another reason not to slack off after the first set. It only took the researchers five weeks to recruit all of the women they surveyed, which indicates that the phenomenon may not be all that rare. And 40 percent of the women involved reported that they had experienced sexual pleasure from exercise at least 10 times.

Unfortunately though, "coregasms" apparently aren't all pleasure. Many of the women surveyed said that they felt self-conscious exercising in public spaces, lest they have an orgasm while lifting weights and lose control. And while this research indicates that exercise can lead to orgasm without the help of sexual fantasies, it doesn't tell us whether or not exercise can actually improve women's sex lives. After all, these orgasms aren't happening during sex.

Center for Sex & Culture Launches Kickstarter for Safer Sex Poster Catalog

The Center for Sex & Culture (CSC) has launched its first-ever Kickstarter campaign to raise money to publish an exhibition catalog of some of the most notable safer sex/AIDs posters from the 80s and 90s.

The collection was donated last year to CSC by Buzz Benson, a graphic artist who co-founded the safer sex club, Eros, and worked with CSC founders Drs. Robert Morgan Lawrence and Carol Queen on the Coalition for Healthy Sex. The Buzz Benson catalog will accompany the CSC's live exhibition of around 100 of the posters that will begin Nov. 7 and run through Jan. 31. It will contain reproduced images from Benson's collection, primarily posters, including safer sex campaigns from North America, Europe and Oceania, as well as an art historical essay by Alex Fialho, an interview with Benson and a foreword by CSC director Dr. Queen.

Benson says in the Kickstarter campaign video: "Posters are something tangible, like we now have in our hands, from 1986, 1987, 1988, and they convey a particular message of the time. Sometimes they do it with whimsy, sometimes they do it with striking fear, sometimes delivering information, but these posters were distributed all around the community in order to spread the message to the entire community of awareness, sexual safety and growth."

The campaign runs until Nov. 5 and has already amassed more than half of its $7,000 goal. Those who pledge can earn relevant rewards, including copies of the catalog, tickets to CatalystCon and a guided tour of CSC.

"One of the things that's so important, and makes me so excited that these images will be put into a book, is that many people think they know what the AIDS era was like, but the fact is that there are many details that are being lost to memory," Queen said, adding that to build a future, we need accurate conceptions of the past.

For more information about the campaign, and a visual tour of some of the posters, visit the CSC's Kickstarter page.

CSC hosts educational and cultural events, maintains a sexuality library, archive and gallery and supports sex-related research projects. It is a 501(c)(3) educational organization. For further details, email carol@sexandculture.org.

MISTRESS DARIA OF DALLAS

Fetish

Fetish has become big business in our culture. The allure of a more adventurous call to libido and sexuality is tightening it's grip everyday, fully climaxing in mainstream acceptance of BDSM and it's safe and sane practices.

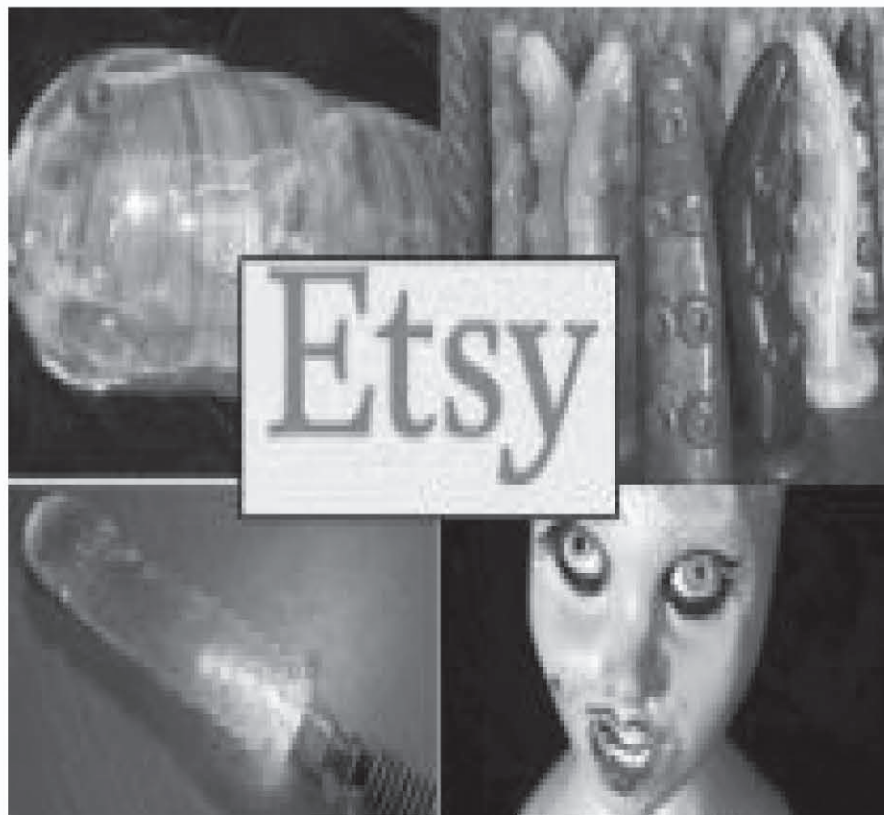

So many people have submissive feelings. We enjoy the rush of adrenaline that exciting activities create. That's why we go to the amusement park, haunted house or watch scary movies. Really great BDSM providers and partners are a must for enjoyment to be complete. It's really a matter of doing a little research. Practice makes perfect so it's best to go slow.

One of the most arousing and adrenaline producing items on the BDSM menu is sensory deprivation. Heart pounding and mind racing, once you have been gagged and bound, the blindfold goes on. Your bare skin exposed to who knows what kind of sensations, you notice your sensitivity heighten. There is no going back. What will happen, can you handle it? The waiting and anticipation are more excruciating than anything. Then suddenly you feel gentle fingertips brush your skin teasingly, with the promise of so much more. Then more happens, pain, the sweet sweet fig of erotic pain coursing through your nipples. You try to scream but your mouth is full. Now begins the real fun, breathing harder you squirm in your bounds. Little beads of sweat emerge glistening on your forehead. What on earth will happen next? You can hear gentle breathing and a slight chuckle or perhaps an excited gasp when you squirm and moan. Clearly this is exciting for you both. You wrestle with thoughts of panic trying to fight them with thoughts of the possibility of more pleasure derived from and with the pain. You feel your heart surging with excitement and intensity. This was what you wanted, the massive overload to your senses is starting to drive you mad. The panting, the perfume, the fingertips, the biting down on the nipples. But just when you thought you could not take anymore, something sharp is being wheeled across your skin, pricking like needles in the most sensitive of places. The goosebumps encase your entire body and make a new surface of your skin. Then suddenly you are yanked from the bondage and all of your fetters removed just to be instructed to enter a latex vacuum bed. Now for some serious sensory deprivation you are told. Inside you are given a tube to breath from and the vacuum starts. There is no turning back now. You feel an of sensation of liquid being poured onto the surface of the latex. All over the tight latex suctioned to your skin, this polish lube is spread by soft fingers. The tickling phenomenon on your nerves is deliciously arousing. Blood is rushing to every sensitive area of your body. You try to squirm but can't. The teasing and rubbing continues as you lay trapped unable to do anything about it. You are certain you are going to explode. If your mouth wasn't crammed full of latex you would beg unabashedly for something you can never have. There is laughter as she stops the vacuum and pulls you out of the bed....you are wet sweaty and almost exhausted. The state of arousal you experienced on this roller coaster ride of pleasure and pain, leaves you panting and breathless yearning for more.

Etsy Abounds With Homemade Sex Toys

Etsy, the online mecca for handmade and vintage hippy-dippy crafts, has a naughty side.

While Etsy's got a rap for being the best place to buy things like custom-crafted, ethically constructed fingerless mittens, it also has a wealth of dildos (ahem, 1,276) and vibrators (ahem, 361) that preserve the aesthetic and unofficial moral code unique to the e-swapmeet.

Because many of the "shops" on Etsy are tiny operations spearheaded by one or two folks, the designs are often highly personal and imaginative, and cater to people who identify as conscious objectors to mass-production culture.

The MJ42 Glass store, which "strives to improve the environment and world to make a better life for everyone on the planet and throughout the universe," proffers a glass dildo made with borosilicate, glass and 22k gold for $220 — or a suitable barter or trade.

The Photocopine shop, based in Paris, France will make a 3D print of your (or your favorite) penis in silicone for $210 using three user-provided photos of the member in question. KNIKlampwork in China makes a hand blown "crystal ball" that is advertised as an all-purpose vaginal exercise ball and anal plug, for only $19.99.

Because it's the Internet, there is also a slew of bizarre and fantastical creations that you wouldn't find in your average adult shop. Ever pined for a Star Wars Lightsaber Dildo? Etsy's got you. A vibrator cozy modeled after Edvard Munch's The Scream? Well, you get the jist...

Despite the down-home vibe, Etsy is not exactly the equivalent of a small, online neighborhood. The site now boasts over one million active stores that are located all over the world.

THE HARD SCORE

To Bark Back Email:
tx2dogs@verizon.net

Satisfaction. It's a past tense word. Why? Because it's a feeling that can only be tasted from an action that's already in the rearview mirror.

You can look for it, chase after it, and dream of it. It can be based on hope and glory or love, or things less honorable.

There is no clean shot at achieving it. The road any must take has built in barriers, whether self-imposed or by opponents design.

It will lend itself to heavens heights or the rudeness of smug or snide. It can help raise or cheapen. It presents itself totally to the chaser, regardless of intent.

The difficulty to achieve satisfaction was raised to its heights in the sixties by a rock n roll band. It can take days, months, years, or a lifetime to go after and never attain. You can use best efforts or guile or skullduggery, satisfaction doesn't care.

And if you can put it on your plate, it is only for a moment that at its best is fleeting.

So it begs the question, for something so difficult and mostly transitory is it really a necessity?

The easy answer is yes. Yes for those who aspire through work and education for careers and family.

But the answer that digs deep in many souls, the answer that looks into our dark corners with a flickering light, the answer that brings forth grim resolve as a human trait, that answer is revenge.

For sports fans everywhere, the time has come upon us to see a stage set that rivals Shakespeare for its cloak and daggers. For the plot twists and turns. For those who will rise above the fray to glory and to those who will fall into the depths of despair.

What is on this stage is a poisoned dagger sheathed in cold blooded revenge that is aimed straight at the heart of Grendel. It is the Saints Rob Ryan against the Cowboys Jerry Jones. Blade against the Vampire King.

Ryan was betrayed by Jones and felt he was made the scapegoat of his depleted defense and the total reason the 2012 campaign failed. Even in a business where coaching changes are made for less call than this, Ryan felt his name and reputation cheapened.

When witches sit around the cauldron what's simmering inside isn't made for creating a wonderful bed of roses. Neither's what's been simmering deep down inside Ryan.

There's more. You had to know there was more.

Here's the next question, when you've got full on revenge coming straight at you, what do you do? When you're the target it doesn't matter whether you believe it justified or no, it's coming at you and you've got limited options.

Romo and Garrett can say all day this is just another football game and the other stuff is all hype to get the fans excited and sell tickets, but you, I, and everyone in the bushes all know that's not true.

This is what the Cowboys offense and one Tony Romo have facing them: a top level defensive coordinator who coached the Cowboys defense against this current offense the previous two years. He knows Garrett's offense and he knows Tony Romo and his squad.

Garrett's offensive scheme has good plays in it, no doubt, but the issue, the real issue, is the play calling, which has had trouble against very good defenses, average defenses, and like they just showed with the Vikings, against poor defenses.

Here's a handy side note: Rex Ryan's D just took out the Saints high octane offense, and Rob Ryan's schemes come from the same kind of attack school.

What do I think? I think Rob Ryan's circling the waters like a shark. I think he's smelling blood that's already there and is sharpening his teeth to add more. I think he's gonna use this game to elevate his players to a higher level for this game and the season.

I think he's going to bring every assault ever known to man and not just to win, not just to beat them down, but to annihilate them in such a manner they're ruined. I think that's what's driving him. I think that's revenge.

Can Ryan do it? Well, if Ryan's only a so so coach, as Jones basically claimed by firing him, and his defense far less than credible, then how is it that in his first year with a Saints defense that last year couldn't stop butterflies, has them flying all over the field and playing top tier D?

Regardless of talent, Garrett's offense because of play calling is vulnerable to every team they face and Ryan knows it far more than any film analyst.

For drama in the sports world it doesn't get any better than this. I can't wait.

NFL Week 9 Review

The Dolphins did beat the Bengals but that offense spent more time harassing its own teammates instead of opponents, you're about to see a massive implosion. There was a major upset that none of us saw coming, the Jets over the Saints.

How about a couple of near upsets, like Dallas and Seattle playing down to the Vikings and Bucs respectively. And didn't I warn you that the Browns were going to go after the Ravens? Yep, sure did.

Anything to be held in reserve? Sure, the Texans backup QB, Case Keenum, he's fun and looks like the real deal. He's earned getting all the first string snaps.

NFL Week 10

Bye week: Browns, Chiefs, Jet's, Patriots.

Thursday 7:30 CST

There's no really good reason, and no even I can't make one up, for anybody to watch this one, so here's what you do, tell the wife that it's a bye and you want to do something with/for her. You want a lot of good will from this because you don't want to be disturbed for some really good games coming Sunday.

Redskins (3-5) at Vikings (1-7). Only thing funny here is if Minnesota knocks them off.

Sunday Noon CST

Eight comin' at ya with four meaningless. The downtrodden: Bills (3-6) at Steelers (2-6); Raiders (3-5) at Giants (2-6); Seahawks (8-1) at Falcons (2-6), and Jags (0-8) at Titans (4-4).

Two that's just for fun: Rams (3-6) at Colts (6-2); and, Eagles (4-5) at Packers (5-2). These are two possible trap games with St Louis is coming around and that defense is stud, and Philly traveling to Green Bay. The Eagles now see themselves just one game out of the NFC East lead and are excited.

These two for the good guys: Bengals (6-3) at Ravens (3-5) and Lions (5-3) at Bears (4-3). Two division games, two must win games. If you can't get them on your local, scrap the grilling and to a watering hole. Yeah, they'll be that good.

3:30 CST

Three here for ya, one is slightly battered, one's a comer, and one's a banger. The roughed up: Texans (2-6) at Cards (4-4). The challenger: Panthers (5-3) at 49ers (6-2). The big money show: Broncos (7-1) at Chargers (4-4).

Carolina's been playing a soft schedule so here's the big test against San Francisco.

Denver's got Jack Del Rio in the driver's seat while Fox is out and he's never really had a good defense to work with. Manning handles the offense. Rivers is having a much better year than the last several, and this is a must win for them. Doggone good fun.

7:30 CST

Oh, c'mon, if you need a pep talk for this one, or didn't know who was playing, just crawl back into your hole 'cause you don't know what excitement is: Cowboys (5-4) at Saints (6-2).

Monday Night Football

The only mystery to this one is how many more Dolphins have been netted and even if half the teams down, can the Bucs win one? Dolphins (4-4) at Bucs (0-8).

Readers Response:

Two Dogs:

Does it seem like the Incognito issue is just an isolated instance? I want an outsider's opinion.

Marta - Dustin

Marta:

From what's being revealed it would be extremely difficult to believe that the coaching staff, GM, and other key front office personnel didn't know what was happening. The head coach, Philbin, even tried to get Martin's dad to help issue a joint press release, and apparently didn't get why he was rejected.

TD

Two Dogs:
Isn't hazing just exactly bullying but they're just trying to hide it?

Dillon - Louisville

Dillon:

Regardless of how you try to diminish it, yes, most of it is. You want to welcome people to your "team", not make them feel abased. Standing up and having to sing your college fight song is one thing, but being forced to spend money, do subservient work, or to be verbally abused and threatened all go beyond acceptable treatment. Look, it's a tough game and you need guys there that can stay mentally tough while a physical beating is going on. All sorts of pressure. You gain that type of team unity through respect and mutual effort in the process. I've never seen where demeaning anybody builds loyalty and toughness. It's also called character, which apparently to those defending these practices only know as a word, not a practicing quality.

TD

Two Dogs:

Can't Jerry Jones or any owener be held accountnable? They treat players so badly.

Maylene - Duluth

Maylene:

It's an entertainment business, if you don't like it, don't go and don't watch.

TD

Two Dogs:

Incna't see how the Jets are any diferent without Sanchez at quarterback, it's the defense carryhing that team smith had 8 completions. They lose form no offense.

Kurtis - Twin Falls

Kurtis:

Many are finally beginning to see exactly that.

TD

Two Dogs:

Can you explain how or why the Ryan boys are such good defensive coaches like their dad was?

Leslie - Frankston

Leslie:

The tree doesn't grow too far from the apple.

TD

Two Dogs:

Do you think no fullback for Dallas this year hurt them? I can't see that they've used their four tight ends anywhere near as effective as New England.

Quinton - Marlboro

Quinton:

When they made the decision to not carry a fullback it told you exactly what, from Jones to Garrett to Romo, they wanted this offense to be. Emmitt Smith, and all top runners, was successful because he had a tough and smart fullback leading the way. No, they haven't used the tight ends to full advantage, mostly because it looks like they don't know how.

TD

Two Dogs:

Isn't the Cowboys "take what the defense allows" the best way to survive in today's passing NFL?

HISTORIC HIGH: 58% of Americans Want Marijuana Legalized

Gallup released new polling data today that shows an overwhelming majority of Americans want marijuana to be legalized. According to their survey, 58% of Americans support legalizing marijuana, while only 39% are opposed. This is up significantly from the last time Gallup polled the question in 2012, when only 48% of Americans were in favor and 50% were opposed. For historical perspective, the first time they surveyed this question in 1969 a paltry 12% of Americans were in favor of legalization.

The support for marijuana legalization has seen unprecedented momentum in the past several years. Gallup observes, "Whatever the reasons for Americans' greater acceptance of marijuana, it is likely that this momentum will spur further legalization efforts across the United States. Advocates of legalizing marijuana say taxing and regulating the drug could be financially beneficial to states and municipalities nationwide."

"The American people have opened their eyes to the failure that is marijuana prohibition and there is no putting the genie back in the bottle. Following the successful passage of marijuana legalization initiatives in Colorado and Washington in 2012, the people of this country see that a new approach to marijuana policy is both required and possible," stated NORML Communications Director Erik Altieri, "The majority of Americans now agree that it is time to legalize and regulate. The issue can no longer be ignored or sidelined. Legalization is now the mainstream position and supporters of perpetuating our war on marijuana will continue to be further relegated to the fringe."

The strongest support was coming from those ages 18-29 (67%), ages 30-49 (62%), Democrats (65%), and Independents (62%). The only major demographic groups lacking majority support are those 65+ (45%) and Republicans (35%).

The Gallup poll randomly sampled 1,028 adults age 18 and older and possesses a margin of error of +/- 4 percent.

In recent months, polls in numerous states, including Louisiana, Maryland, and Texas, have shown majority support for regulating cannabis for adult consumers

For more information, please contact Allen St. Pierre, NORML Executive Director or Erik Altieri, NORML Communications Director, at (202) 483-5500. Full poll results can be viewed online at: <http://www.gallup.com/poll/165539/first-time-americans-favor-legalizing-marijuana.aspx>.

Update on our Impairment Measuring iPhone App

Dear NORML Supporter,

We are forwarding you this message on behalf of Lenny Frieling of Colorado NORML.

Sincerely,

The NORML Team

Update on our Impairment Measuring iPhone App

Dear NORML Friends,

Walk or Drive is the new name for our CheckPlusBalance iPhone impairment-measuring app. We still help you decide whether or not to drive based upon objective evidence-based testing. Although sensitive to marijuana, it is sensitive generally to any impairing influence. We measure memory, balance, time perception, and reaction time, and compare it to your personal baseline. NORML's Deputy Director Paul Armentano helped with the development of the testing.

The app on iTunes is still called checkplusbalance, and the links from the websites all point there. We will be submitting Walk or Drive with substantial enhancements in the very near future! The current free version works fine, and shortly, Walk or Drive 1.0 will be better, and still free. Try the free download now. I believe you'll be impressed. We remain open to input.

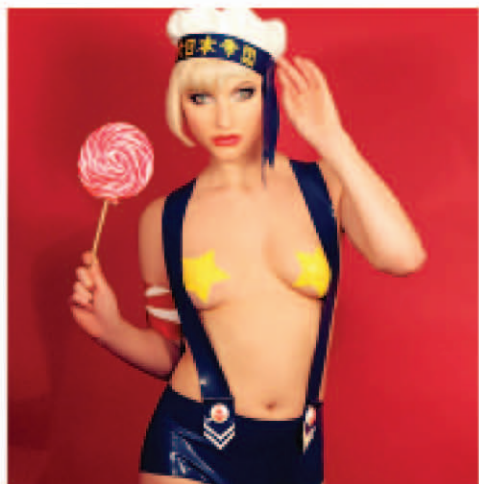

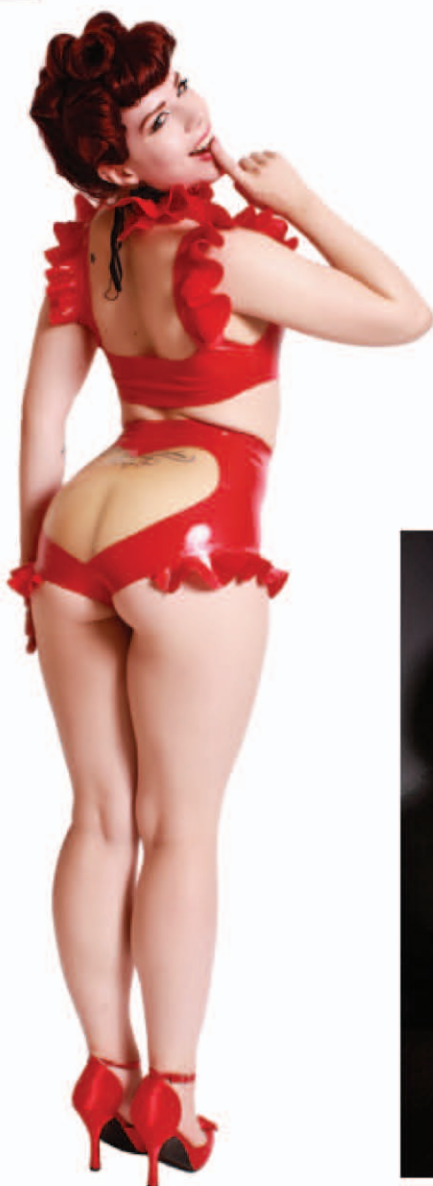

WalkorDrive (checkplusbalance if you search the iTunes store) remains a free app at this time. The link is at www.walkordrive.com. The free download link is right at the top of the page.

I am thrilled to say that we are working with National NORML and hope to have a NORML version of this app available quite soon. We are all looking forward to Walk or Drive 2.0 N and in the meantime, check out what is already a truly useful app. NORML can lead the way to responsible driving. This is a great opportunity for all of us.

Lenny Frieling, Colorado NORML

Maryland Legislature Seeks to Make 'Revenge Porn' a Felony

State Delegate Jon Cardin is proposing a bill tomorrow that would make posting "revenge porn" a felony in Maryland.

Cardin, a Democrat who is running for attorney general, has authored a bill that makes it illegal to "intentionally disclose in a public way, using the Internet or otherwise, a sexually explicit image of another person without their consent to release that image." And as a deterrent: offenders would face up to five years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

According to a news release, Cardin, Danielle Keats Citron, a University of Maryland Carey law professor, and victim advocate Annmarie Chirarini will speak about the bill during a press conference tomorrow morning at the University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law in Baltimore.

If the bill is approved, Maryland would join a handful of states that have criminalized the new form of Internet harassment, which has grown in popularity over the years. Often times, perpetrators are spurned lovers who post compromising photos of their exes as a means of revenge.

New Jersey acted as trailblazer for the campaign against revenge porn, making it a felony in 2004. California followed suit earlier this month when Gov. Jerry Brown approved a bill that designated it as misdemeanor offense. New York and Pennsylvania law makers have announced that they are drafting similar legislation for their respective states.

Porn & Condoms: Adult Industry Stands Divided

The adult industry remains in opposition with Los Angeles County and the state of California over whether condoms should be mandated in porn, but the biggest debate is happening within its ranks. In an industry that profits from creating sexual fantasies, the most polarizing question facing it today is whether the use of condoms is enough to destroy them.

Many believe the combination of mandatory condoms and STI testing every 14 days provides porn performers with the safest possible environment in which to work. However others say that condoms do not necessarily reduce the risk of contagion and shooting porn with them results in a critical disadvantage in the marketplace.

"We don't have our actors use condoms but we adhere to strict testing for HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases," said Larry Flynt, founder of LFP/Hustler Video. "The reason why we don't demand they use condoms is because there's no market for videos with condoms. For some reason they do not sell when condoms are used. It's like masturbating with gloves on." There is a "psychological barrier that the people who are viewing the films have trouble getting over" when it comes to condoms.

That barrier can not only be a deal-breaker for porn fans, but also for studios producing adult films for profit and the performers who prefer to work without condoms for various personal reasons. And it's why in a business in which consenting adults use their bodies to earn their living, it should be up to the performers to choose whether they want to use that level of protection while filming a scene.

The condoms-in-porn issue became a controversial topic both within the adult film industry and in the mainstream media during the run-up to the November 2012 election. The AIDS Healthcare Foundation (AHF), which is the largest provider of HIV/AIDS medical care in the country, positioned itself as the most vocal proponent of mandatory condom use. With an annual budget of $750 million, AHF runs a network of HIV and AIDS testing and treatment facilities around the world. It has 10 clinics in the Los Angeles area alone. AHF orchestrated an aggressive multimedia campaign to urge the passage of Measure B, also known as the "Safer Sex in the Adult Film Industry Ordinance" that requires the use of condoms in the production of adult movies in L.A. County. It passed with almost 57 percent of the public voting "yes."

"Basically these people who are proponents of condom use, they don't care about the issue of condoms. They're just trying to shut the industry down and they found a niche way to do this," Flynt said. "If you go back over the last 20 years, you can count the number of HIV infections in porn as an example. The average is way below the infection rate in any particular category in the whole country. You have a better chance of getting AIDS from having a one-night stand out in Glendale than getting it on a porn shoot. We're fighting an uphill battle in getting people to believe this, but it happens to be true."

The actual enforcement of the condom law is another matter that is far from resolved. Vivid Entertainment, along with co-plaintiffs Kayden Kross and Logan Pierce, in September filed an appeal in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals regarding U.S. District Judge Dean Pregerson's denial of a temporary restraining order in their suit against enforcement of Measure B. That ongoing struggle currently is the adult industry's most visible response to the passage of Measure B.

But the condoms-in-porn initiative got even more convoluted with the introduction of legislation sponsored by Assembly man Isadore Hall that would require performers to use condoms in productions shot anywhere in California. The Senate's decision on the condom legislation now referred to as AB 640 is on hold until 2014 because it was not heard or voted on by the Sept. 12 deadline.

Nina Hartley, who has performed in porn movies for more than 30 years, also opposes mandatory condoms, favoring a "truly condom optional" policy. "If a performer would feel more comfortable in a scene and therefore more free, I want them to be able to choose condoms without there being negative repercussions, vis-à-vis future employment by that company," said Hartley. "If a performer feels more comfortable not using condoms in a particular movie or with a particular partner, then the performer should not be required to use them because of company policy."

Hartley, who is a registered nurse as well as an industry activist, strongly advocates women's and men's rights to "control their own bodies and what happens with them." "As well, it makes no medical sense, nor does it dramatically increase performer safety to mandate condoms when a performer does not want to use them," Hartley continued. "Stats show that the testing protocols we have in place have been very, very effective in keeping HIV out of the performer population. And our performer notification protocols quickly find the first- and second-generation contacts of an infected performer." Hartley noted that "between 1998 and 2012, porn had two documented cases of on-set transmission of HIV, while L.A. County had 30,000 new cases."

Three new cases of HIV—none of which were found to have been contracted on a set according to adult industry trade association, Free Speech Coalition (FSC)—clobbered the porn industry this past summer, prompting two separate moratoriums on production. Those cases came on the heels of the second industry syphilis scare in as many years in a case that ultimately turned out to be a false alarm as the performer's confirmatory tests came back negative. But less than a week later, the industry faced another crisis when a veteran male performer was alleged to be working in scenes despite testing positive for some form of hepatitis. The performer in question chose to remain silent about the allegations, which still have not been confirmed.

These developments not only placed adult industry testing protocols under increased scrutiny but also re-ignited discussions about mandating condom use in all adult films regardless where they're shot.

FSC, which led a "No on Measure B" campaign in 2012 and continues to oppose the mandatory condom law in favor of self-regulation by the industry, stated it has a "condom optional" policy for adult films. "Our policy is performers have a choice whether or not to use a condom," said FSC CEO Diane Duke. "The current testing protocols have clearly worked. These latest incidents of HIV-positive performers have shown that our testing protocols have worked. There were no transmissions on set and we were able to identify HIV-positive people and get them treatment."

Tristan Taormino, the author, sex educator and feminist filmmaker, said she recently changed her policy on condoms in her movies from a performer's choice to being a requirement. Her exception would be if the couple is "fluid-bonded" and requests no condoms with each other. "When I solicited feedback from performers who were given the opportunity to anonymously state what they want, the majority told me they want to use condoms but are afraid to publicly say so for fear of losing work or being blacklisted," Taormino said. "This honest information coupled with the increased incidence of STI outbreaks and issues in the past year, and the three recent cases of performers testing HIV positive contributed to my decision. This is not just about HIV, but the increased incidences of STI transmissions on sets."

The porn industry's lack of solidarity and the desire for anonymity on the question of condom use is only increasing. Several high-profile porn performers and studio owners declined requests for comment on the issue.

Steve Orenstein founded Wicked Pictures, which has mandated condom use in all its sex scenes for vaginal and anal intercourse since 1998. Wicked made condoms a requirement after the HIV scare that year—the company had been condom optional prior to that. "Wicked has been condom mandatory for 14 years," said Orenstein. "Regardless of that, I have never said what anyone else should choose to do with their company. That hasn't changed. Every company and individual performer should decide what works for them. My position has also stayed consistent that the government shouldn't mandate that decision either. If every company went completely condom only, would that help Wicked with the percentage of viewers that stay away from condom movies? Of course, but that still doesn't make it our place to dictate what others do."

With their condom policy in place, Orenstein has built Wicked Pictures into a leading studio known for its quality features geared toward the couples market.

Because so-called "gonzo" or "all-sex" movies—porn without a plot—often contain significantly more hardcore, graphic sexual encounters than most couples porn, the use of condoms is that much tougher of a sell to the public. And porn movies without a plot still represent the majority of what's being produced on a weekly basis.

Immoral Productions owner Dan Leal is one gonzo studio owner who has made the adjustment to condoms but has yet to see his revenue drop. Leal produces, directs and performs in his live shoots that are later packaged for DVD distribution by Pure Play Media. In February, he changed his company policy from condom optional to mandatory. "From the standpoint of the fans as performers, they didn't have a history of [testing] panels like a normal performer would have," Leal said. "Then I always had condoms on set for performers and very few chose to use condoms. It was rare." He said that his decision really wasn't even his to make.

"It was we're following the law. The law requires for us to use condoms," Leal said. "And our stuff is simulcast on television, so there is no way to circumvent it, no way to play hide-and-seek like some other producers." Leal added, "I understand both sides of the argument. I listen to performers. It's just like wearing your seatbelt while driving. It's not an option. Technically, everyone anywhere in the state of California is supposed to use condoms if they're making adult content for profit."

Given the language of Section 5193, the adult industry's policy should be to "comply with the law or seek a variance from the Standards Board," Peter Riley, manager of Cal/OSHA's Region III, said

Leal said at post time he has been working closely with his attorney Michael Fattorosi on drafting a variance to change the language of Section 5193 in a way that would benefit the entire adult industry. "We're getting closer to coming up with a compromise that is livable for everyone," Leal said. "Part of the variance is producers would not be required to use condoms for oral sex." "Most people are choosing to ignore it," Leal continued. "The law is very clear. It's very straightforward. It's been on the books for 20 years. There is already an existing OSHA law on the books but the only time they ever enforced it or investigated people is when there was the possibility of people spreading HIV on set."

Cal/OSHA's Riley said the penalty for someone who is found to be in violation of 5193 "depends on the violation of the law and the classification of the Citation." "If the citation is for a serious exposure then the Citation would be classified as Serious and the penalty can range from a minimum of $900 to a maximum of $25,000," Riley said. "If the Citation is classified as Regulatory or General then the penalty is less." According to Riley, the last time an adult film producer was cited for a violation of 5193 was in September. "If upon inspection Cal/OSHA believes there is a violation, Labor Code 6317 requires Cal/OSHA to issue a citation for the violation," Riley said.

Riley would not say whether he thought Measure B or AB 640 were redundant because it is Cal/OSHA policy to not comment on legislation. However, he did confirm that 5193 was not written with the intention of regulating the adult film community.

Using condoms in all his shoots has increased his broadcast sales opportunities, Leal said, and only a small number of fans have complained. "Today's consumer is so knowledgeable, especially with everything that just happened recently," Leal reasoned. "I bet if you asked any fan, 'Should porn use condoms?' Ninety-eight percent would say, 'Of course they should, what are they retarded?' The only people who think we shouldn't are the nincompoops who are in it. And that used to be me, too." Leal added, "Sure they are physically taxing. We go through six to 10 per show. They're a nuisance. They make it harder to do a scene. Most of the girls don't like them either. But these are things you learn to adapt to."

Tom Byron, one of the longest tenured performers in the adult industry, more than 30 years, said "I believe condoms and testing are the safest and most logical means of protecting talent from HIV and other STDs." "I've been in the biz since 1982, before AIDS was an issue or even known about really. In fact, the first time I heard someone talking about AIDS and it making people sick, I thought they were talking about the diet candy AYDS, that is was tainted or something.

Byron, who recently took over writing for the industry gossip blog Adultfyi.com, said he reached his conclusion about condoms because "testing can't be trusted," the business is now more global and it's impossible to regulate someone's actions off the set. "A test is only good the day you take it and everybody knows it," Byron said. "Without a condom, a test is meaningless."

Glenn King, a producer/director who owns Mean Bitches Productions which is distributed by gonzo porn heavyweight Evil Angel, said he requires condoms in every scene that involves intercourse. But if they were not mandated by law, King would offer performers a choice. "Like any small business, we try to make our best efforts to abide by all laws," King said, adding that condoms are not good for his bottom line. "Let's be realistic here: Condoms hurt sales. Like any form of entertainment, pornography is about creating visual fantasies. When most people fantasize about their dream sex, they don't picture themselves wearing a condom." King continued, "My preference would be to tell the performers before each scene, 'My recommendation and the recommendation of OSHA today is that you use condoms in this scene. It will provide a higher level of safety for you. But as performers, it is your choice. If you want to decline this protection, sign here.' And then they would sign a document acknowledging that it's their decision. Of course, both performers would have to decline for us to shoot the scene without condoms."

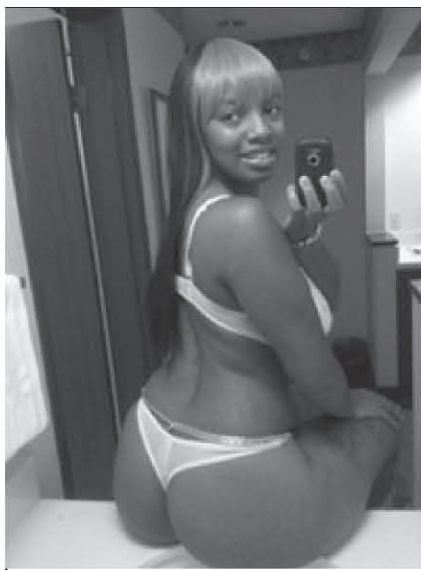

Veteran director/performer Miles Long thinks that any policy on condoms "should be determined by our industry and the people in it." "One of the things I have always noticed about government policy is that it always seems to be written by people who have nothing to do with the industry that the policy is supposed to regulate," Long told XBIZ. "To me, that seems to be the worst common-sense way to implement any policy. That's like having a layperson tell racecar drivers what is safe for them to do or not do on a track. They don't have the experience or the knowledge to offer any guidance or make any determination on what should or shouldn't happen."

Regardless whether Measure B survives Vivid's legal challenge, AB 640 passes the legislature or there is a variance that alters California's Standard 5163, the one constant remains: the porn industry itself remains clearly divided on the issue of condom use.

Even almost a year after Measure B passed in the porn epicenter of L.A. County, the nature of new porn being released has been virtually unchanged. Many studios have taken steps to shoot their new movies outside of L.A. County, while dozens of others have quietly continued to shoot porn without condoms behind closed doors. The reality is that the prospect of county or statewide enforcement of condom use presents a logistical nightmare for officials who most likely would prefer to use their time tackling issues more pertinent to improving the quality of life for the citizens of Los Angeles and the state of California.

In the meantime, porn performers can choose to stick to their own personal policies for condoms, adhere to a studio's policy if it differs from theirs, or opt out of the scene before it begins. It's their body and it's always their choice.
